Nurse puts her heart into helping those in need

The poverty she experienced growing up filled Fiona Ke, 32, with compassion for the less fortunate, the thing I would never recommend. I felt I had no choice but to do it. It was a good decision. Not only did it get me a place in my heart but it also got me more empathy for patients after my heart operation.

The poverty she experienced growing up filled Fiona Ke, 32, with compassion for the less fortunate, the thing I would never recommend. I felt I had no choice but to do it. It was a good decision. Not only did it get me a place in my heart but it also got me more empathy for patients after my heart operation.

"My dad abandoned us when I was around five or six years old and my mum struggled to raise the three of us, from the youngest. She also had to support our granddad, my dad's elderly father, who suffered from hearing loss. Sometimes, there would be no electricity for two or three days and we were put in the master bedroom, and my grandmother slept in the living room."

"When I was in primary school, I wanted to be a nurse because it seemed like a caring job where I could help people. When I was 15, I started working as a cleaner at night."

"I also volunteer with Happy People Helping People, which gives old cardboard collectors free meals. Recently, I saw an elderly person fall as she was rushing to get her meal."

"When I was young, I benefited from the help given to us by various organisations. I also hope to start a mobile clinic for the elderly."

"I also volunteer but I help whenever I can. We are both giving people and we help one another. Times will pass."

"When I was younger, going to McDonald’s for a meal was a luxury. I see many people in situations and I try to understand them, especially when they are in despair."

"I try to volunteer but I help whenever I can. We are both giving people and we help one another. Times will pass."

"The poverty she experienced growing up filled Fiona Ke, 32, with compassion for the less fortunate, the thing I would never recommend. I felt I had no choice but to do it. It was a good decision. Not only did it get me a place in my heart but it also got me more empathy for patients after my heart operation."

"My dad abandoned us when I was around five or six years old and my mum struggled to raise the three of us, from the youngest. She also had to support our granddad, my dad's elderly father, who suffered from hearing loss. Sometimes, there would be no electricity for two or three days and we were put in the master bedroom, and my grandmother slept in the living room."